German Smugglers
Operating in Holland

"Noble" Women Are Caught at the Frontier

There undoubtedly is a considerable amount of smuggling still going on from Holland into Belgium, and especially into Germany.

Whole romances could be written about the endless varying devices used and about the categories and nationalities going in for smuggling. Only a short time ago two widely known German countesses, homeward bound with a special recommendation from our foreign office, were caught at the frontier smuggling valuable quantities of rubber and various articles. They pretended to be highly indignant, said it was all a mistake, insisted that their luggage should be sent at once to the foreign office at Berlin, where one of them actually did belong; yet, all was confiscated, and each of these "noble" women was sentenced to two months' imprisonment.

From such as these the practice descends, in marvelous variety, to the little boy who had hidden many tablets of chocolate in his drawers! Then there were Dutch day laborers going across the border to work in Germany, returning at night practically stripped, till now all new underwear is being officially stamped by the customs officials. And last, but not least, there are the sordid mean people who run smugglers, but remain safely at home, pocketing the enormous profits and paying a pension to the family, if the smuggler gets into prison or even if he is shot.

Faces and Beards

The first Tommy was ruddy of countenance, with a huge beard of the hue politely known as ambury. The second was smooth-shaven. "I uster have a beard like that till I saw myself in the glass. Then I cut it off."

But the bearded man was not dismayed. "Much better 'ave left it on, mate. I uster have a face like yours till I saw it in the glass. Then I grewed this beard."—Everybody's Magazine.

"BEST MEDICINE

For Ohio Woman.

Portsmouth, Ohio.—"I suffered from irregularities, pains in my side and was so weak at times I could hardly get around to do my work, and as I had four in my family and three boarders it made it very hard for me. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me. I took it and it has restored my health. It is certainly the best medicine for women's ailments I ever saw."—Mrs. SARA SHAW, R. No. 1, Portsmouth, Ohio.

Mrs. Shaw found the merit of this medicine and wrote this letter in order that other suffering women may find relief as she did.

Women who are suffering as she was should not drag along from day to day without giving this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a trial. Oil Storage Tanks

Now Being Built

Consumption of Oil on the Canadian Prairie Farms Is Increasing

The agricultural development of Western Canada is calling for an immense amount of power—motor, horse and man. To conserve the last-named, the two first-named are being utilized to the utmost. But without any diminution in the use of horse power on the farms, considerable use is being made of the tractor, and the consumption of oil on the Canadian prairie farms is increasing by leaps and bounds. The last few years have seen numbers of oil tanks springing up all over the country, and plans have been made for the erection of several more at various points throughout the three provinces. One company has at the present time twenty-three storage tanks in course of construction at country points.

The Proven Asthma Remedy. Since asthma existed there has been no lack of good heral remedies, but they have proved short lived and worthless. The ever-growing reputation of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Asthma Remedy has given it a place in the field of medicine which no other can approach. It has never been pushed by sensational methods, but has simply gone on effecting relief and making new converts.

Stranger Than Fiction

Mr. Harry Lauder told a touching story recently to the American Luncheon Club in London, England. "When I was in the United States I had a letter from a lady in Baltimore telling me that the favorite song of her son who was fighting in France, was 'Roamin' in the Gloamin'.' One day, while roaming in the gloaming, somewhere in France, he came on a wooden cross engraved with a Union Jack. Something made him lift the Union Jack. The name on the grave was Captain Lauder, my own son."

What the Germans Hated to Leave BehindWine Worth Millions in Cellars, of Rheims

"According to calculated estimates of the firms engaged in the trade, there are 60,000,000 bottles of champagne in the cellars of Rheims, the total value of which is anything up to $150,000,000.

"Very little champagne is now being sent out of France, the necessities of military transport rendering it almost impossible to send supplies to England or anywhere else. Some of the largest firms occasionally have forwarded to them a consignment of three or four hundred cases, by canal via Paris and Havre.

"At the present time it is impossible for the trade to fulfill anything but a small percentage of their orders. There are thousands of cases on order without prospect of delivery in the near future.

"Many of the champagne firms in Rheims have already removed part of their stock nearer Paris. Transport difficulties prevent anything like a general removal of the 60,000,000 bottle of sparkling wine which lie underneath the old cathedral town."

French People Will Salvage Steel

With all their looting and their pillaging, the Germans have had to leave a wealth of steel in the retreat from France. This steel is buried in the grain fields and the woodlands over which the warring nations have been fighting. It is the steel from countless shells, and its value is high in the millions of marks. Some day it will be salvaged by the people of France, though serving as meagre compensation to those whose fields have been damaged. These articles of mines will no doubt be worked for years, and the wasted German steel turned into the tools of peaceful French farmers.—Christian Science Monitor.

French Display New Vigor

Armies of Petain Show No Signs of War Weariness

The French army never grows old. It shows at each offensive new vigor and proves its eternal vitality. One of the many divisions proving this is the immortal Moroccan division whose general wears upon his breast the war cross and ribbon with eleven palms, representing eleven orders or citations. One of its recently organized regiments composed of native-African troops has just won its second citation, its zouave regiment a seventh citation and the gallant foreign legion a ninth citation. Its artillery and engineering units have also been cited several times.

Yet such a profusion of honors does not tire this magnificent division. After having engaged in nineteen days of terrific battling, beginning August 20, when it attacked with General Mangin's army towards Moulin-sous-Touvent where it progressed more than fourteen kilometres (8.2 miles) in 48 hours, capturing more than 1,500 prisoners and 92 cannon and then assaulting the Germans in the direction of Crecy-au-Mont, where it advanced eight kilometres (4.8 miles) after crossing the Allette and surmounting fearful difficulties against ferocious resistance the Moroccan division was attached to a fourth army, where it was charged with taking the formidable Butte du Mesnil, crisscrossed with trenches and burrowed with shelters that the Germans were overwhelmed before they had a chance to recover from the first shock of the assault. Dermoise valley lying behind, the Mesnil butte was flooded over to a width of 200 metres (more than 600 feet). Few foot bridges remained after the artillery fire started, and these were submerged. Orders came to turn the submerged zones. A thin line of troops was left behind for a frontal assault against the powerfully organized line of machine gun shelters. Attacking in a thick fog, the men from the Moroccan division quickly surrounded and subdued the German garrison.

No man or woman should hobble painfully about because of corns when so certain a relief is at hand as Holloway's Corn Cure.

An Ancient Weapon

Cannon Dating From the Year 1547 Captured by the British at Bagdad

Rajim-I-Jan-Rumiya is inscribed on the old Persian gun which, at the request of King George V., now stands on the Horse Guards parade ground for inspection by the public. It was captured by the British on their entry into Bagdad, and was sent by Sir Stanley Maude and the British expeditionary force under his command as a gift to the king. The gun dates from the year 1547, and was built by the Shah of Persia, Ismail II., to wage war with against the Turks, who were giving support to his rebellious brother. Part of the gun's inscription states that "The Commander of Victory and Help, the Shah, desiring to blot out all trace of the Turks, ordered Dgiev to make this gun." The inscription goes on to describe the capacity of the gun for "spitting out fire like a dragon." Rajim-I-Jan-Rumiya is a chronogram for the year of the Hegira 954, which is A.D. 1547, the date the gun was made for war against the Turk.—Christian Science Monitor.

Glass Hair Now

Artificial and substitute hair is being made in Germany, according to information gathered by commerce reports which say: "The importation of human hair from China has long been stopped. The material which is being used is really a substitute for silk. "At first silk hair was made, but the sale of this article was forbidden by the government. For dolls, glass hair is made."

Many of the brave women who attend our wounded heroes in this war are women who have used Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription, or who recommend it. The hospital, with its work and long hours, imposes extreme hardship on a woman's strength. Every woman should make herself fit for war, all at home or abroad. She should obtain a book called the "Medical Adviser," either at her nearest drug store or by sending 50 one-cent stamps to Dr. Pierce, Courtwright St., Bridgeport, Ont., for this book which tells about Nursing, Bandaging, Anatomy, Physiology, Marriage.

Thousands of women in Canada have overcome their sufferings and have been cured of woman's ills, by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Sold by druggists in liquid or tablet form. Send Dr. V. M. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., 10c for trial pkg. "I was very much indeed to add my recommendation to the many others that have found relief in 'Favorite Prescription.' After not-hered I could not properly regain my strength. I was very weak and nervous, and had a terrible cough. I was very miserable when I began taking the 'Prescription.' I noticed a marked improvement before I had finished one bottle. I kept up its use and was completely cured of my cough and it built me up in a good healthy state. Prairie Provinces'
Butter ProductionMore Than Two and a Quarter Million Pounds Produced in Three Provinces

By a recent order of the Dominion government requisitioning all the creamery butter produced in Canada during the period from September 30 to November 9 to supply the needs of the allied nations in Europe, attention is drawn to the importance of the output of the Prairie Provinces. It is estimated that 650,000 pounds of creamery butter will be produced in Manitoba during this period, while in Northern Alberta alone half a million pounds will be manufactured. If another half million pounds is added for Southern Alberta and three-quarters of a million pounds for Saskatchewan—and these figures might easily be short of the mark—more than two and a quarter million pounds of creamery butter will be produced in the three provinces in the six weeks' period. The dairy industry in Western Canada is growing in importance month after month and year after year.

Monsieur:

For 15 days in the month of January I was suffering with pain of rheumatism in the foot. I tried all kinds of remedies but nothing did me any good. One person told me about MINARD'S LINIMENT; as soon as I tried it the Saturday night, the next morning I was feeling very good; I tell you this remedy is very good; I could give you a good certificate any time that you would like to have one. If any time I come to hear about any person sick of rheumatism, I could tell them about this remedy.

Yours truly,
ERNEST LEVEILLE.

Open Their Homes
To Canadian OfficersMany Old English and Scottish Families Entertain Them

The Canadian Daily Record, London, has the following article on Canadian officers' leave:

Many old English and Scottish families have opened their beautiful mediaeval and modern homes, from the Isle of Wight to the Isle of Arran, to Canadian officers on leave in the Old Country, and those who have accepted these generous invitations are full of thanks both to Lady Drummond, of the Canadian Red Cross society, and to their kindly hosts and hostesses.

The work of Lady Drummond and the Canadian Red Cross society in this particular sphere may be divided into two sections. The first covers wounded or invalided officers who have passed through their convalescent stage at Matlock Bath, where all officer casualties proceed after their active hospital treatment is completed.

The Red Cross have a branch at Matlock which arranges for these officers, if they so desire, to spend their three weeks' leave of absence at one or other of these magnificent private homes. An officer, for instance, may choose to spend a couple of weeks in Scotland, where he can indulge in a little salmon fishing, and then may be glad to go to have a look at the Isle of Wight. There are hosts and hostesses in almost every county whose doors are open to from one to ten officers at a time. Many of them, too, extend their hospitality to both officers and their wives.

The society also has a beautiful officers' home down at Sidmouth, in Devonshire. This place, which is in charge of Lady Allan, wife of Lt.-Col. Sir Montagu Allan, has accommodation for twenty officers at one time.

The other section deals with officers on leave either from France or England. There is a list of some 200 invitations, most of which are open the whole year round.

The lonely Canadian officers serving in British regiments are also eligible for these invitations. Hundreds in the Royal Air Force have accepted them—and thanked Lady Drummond and the Red Cross while their feelings are full of gratitude towards those generous-hearted people of the Motherland who are doing their best to make the short leave of overseas officers a real holiday.

Chopsticks in France

Chinese Meal Would Not Suit
Frenchman

During a day of repose I took occasion to visit an Annamite camp, says Le Roy Baldrige, in "Asia" Magazine. A bit of French landscape has been turned into Annam. As we pass the kitchen we see at once that the dejeuner being prepared is not for a Frenchman. Most prominent is a kettle three feet in diameter containing rice. Which is the only thing a Polu cannot be forced to eat! Before the cook clamps back the lid we notice in the centre of the white steaming mass a bowl of onions for flavoring. Squatted nearby the assistant cook with his couteau—a broad-ended, curved Chinese blade two feet in length—chops up meat into little squares as he chants something with an appropriate rhythm the while. A driver comes for his meal. The cook drops a ladleful of rice on one side of the extended plate and on the other a little cube of boiled meat and in the centre a splash of sauce. The sauce is the mystery. No Frenchman could explain it to me except in terms of violent gesticulation. Then instead of taking out a "couteau d'Apache" as all the rest of us do, and starting by slicing off a hunk of dark army bread from the loaf which every Polu keeps concealed somewhere about his person, our yellow comrade produces two sure-enough chop sticks from an inner pocket, and, sitting down on the running board of his truck, enters upon that fascinating feat of dining against the laws of gravity.

Italy Benefits By Allied War EconomyWill Not Be Called Upon to Make Fresh Sacrifices

The fact that in future all the nations of the entente and America as well, will eat bread of the same quality, as stated by Signor Crespi, the Italian food minister, to the London correspondent of the Corriere della Sera, should, the writer declares, do away with all suspicions that Italy is to be called upon to make fresh sacrifices or those which are not shared by the other allies. Who would have thought, Signor Crespi asked, that when at the general conference in Paris last December, M. Clementel proposed a plan for a single economic and financial front it would have been carried out with such regularity, swiftness and efficiency? He described the organization "of the colossal machine which controls the movement of all economic matters and the war supplies necessary to the life of 300,000,000 belligerents and neutrals. It moves, he said, with a perfect rhythm, and is marvelously arranged and prompt, so that urgent demands receive their answer in a few days, sometimes in a few hours."

Signor Crespi spoke of the forthcoming meetings in London and declared that as Italian food minister, he knew perfectly how and within what limits he could act, and his knowledge gave him confidence and calm. The importance of the inter-allied organization, he said, was not, as yet, perfectly understood in Italy; the recognition of it as the supreme controller which nothing could not should escape could not be sufficiently urged. The writer declares that the organization described constitutes a possible nucleus for a league of nations and that these statements of Signor Crespi are reassuring not only as regards the present, but the future also. The allies will not reap the fruit of their sacrifices in military matters alone, but likewise in the huge structure of firm economic cohesion which is lightening the load of their common work today and will enable them to face the time of reconstruction without fear tomorrow.

It Testifies for Itself.—Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil, needs no testimonial of its powers other than itself. Who ever tries it for coughs or colds, for cuts or contusions, for sprains or burns, for pains in the limbs or body, well know that the medicine proves itself and needs no guarantee. This shows why this Oil is in general use.

Western Cattle To the Fore

At the exhibitions in Eastern Canada this year, many of the prizes were won by cattle of the West. At the Toronto Exhibition no less than eight prizes were carried away by John G. Barron, of Carberry, Manitoba, for his Shorthorn cattle.

For thirty-five years Mr. Barron has been steadily breeding good Shorthorns in Western Canada. He has never spent any money on new blood except what he made on his farm. He early decided on a good type and stuck to it, and many of the best Shorthorns on the continent trace back to his herd. His success points to the enormous possibilities of cattle breeding in Western Canada—an industry which, notwithstanding the great progress that has been made, is still only in the initial stages of its development.

"If I Could Only Be Strong and Healthy Like Other Girls."

THIS is the longing of the girl who is pale, weak and anaemic.

She is lacking in energy and strength, and is so easily tired out that she does not feel like taking outdoor exercise or joining others in social gatherings.

The healthy, happy outdoor girls get in the way of leaving her to herself, and she gets lonely, discouraged and despondent.

The source of trouble is in the condition of the blood, which has become thin and watery, and utterly lacking in nutritive qualities.

The anaemic condition is shown in the pallor of the lips, the gums and the eyelids, as well as in the pale face and angular form.

Nature has provided for the purifying of the blood by having it sent to the lungs periodically to come in contact with the fresh air and take up new oxygen.

Unfortunately this plan of nature has been defeated by human beings living too much indoors and breathing over and over again the vitiated air of ill-ventilated rooms. This is the usual cause of anaemia, as well as a reason for its continuation.

The blood gets ever thinner and more watery, until the human system is literally starved.

The digestive system has failed, and your health must go naturally downhill until you can find some means of restoration.

Fortunately, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food furnishes the vital substances needed for regenerating the entire organism when in a run-down condition.

Gradually and certainly the building-up process is established, and the pure, rich blood created in the system carries health and strength to every part of the body.

Weakness and disease, the cause of discouragement, failure and unhappiness, give place to new hopes, new confidence and stronger determination to succeed.

The appetite is sharpened, digestion improves, and you find yourself enjoying your meals and taking a new interest in life. As you gain in strength and energy you feel encouraged to keep up the use of this restorative treatment until thoroughly restored to health.

The rosy cheeks and healthful appearance of people who have used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is its strongest recommendation, and accounts for its ever-increasing popularity.

It is for sale by all dealers, 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.75, or by mail from Edman-son, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto. Look for the portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M.D., the famous Receipt Book author, on the box you buy.

Canadians Glorious Record

General Currie's telegram in response to a message of congratulation from Canadian newspaper men contains a sentence that should be treasured in the records of Canada so long as the Dominion lasts. Said the famous leader of the Canadian fighting corps:

"In the last two years of strenuous fighting it (the Canadian Corps) has never lost a gun, has never failed to take an objective and has never been driven from an inch of ground once consolidated."

It is not necessary to make comparisons in this connection. All the Allied forces fought bravely and to the limit of their ability through the great conflict and all are deserving of highest praise, says the Calgary Herald.

What General Currie has said of the Canadians places our fighters on a level with the best that were there and gives them an honor than which none could be greater.

History of the war will let the world of the future know just how steadily the Canadians were engaged in front line work during the crucial period of the conflict and when the full story has been placed on the record there will have been added to the pages of the Dominion history one of most glorious and inspiring chronicles that could be penned of any people.

The war has been won, which is good for the world.
Victory may not bring material benefit to Canada, but from the record made by her sons in battle she is bound to reap rich reward in world prestige during the years to come.

The Surest Sign of Stability

The smaller average crop returns of this season do not appear to be having much effect on the price of farm land.
Indeed farms that are changing hands now are in some instances bringing higher prices than those at which similar farms were sold for a year ago. There are not many sales just now in the Gleichen district, mostly, perhaps, for the reason that buyers expected prices to go down, but our farmers know too well that such a dry year as this seldom comes and are anxious to prove their contentions. This is surely the best sign of stability of Gleichen's prosperity

Conditions are particularly favorable to mixed farming throughout Alberta and particularly in the Gleichen district. Splendid crops of wheat and other grains are grown, and thousands of farmers have become rich from growing grain exclusively, such farmers have by their neglect of livestock, missed wonderful opportunities for increasing their profits and improving their homes. In fact farmers generally throughout the Prairie Provinces have begun to realize the place of livestock in their farm operations is evidenced by the rapid growth of the meat dairying, wool and other allied industries during the past few years. Comparatively insignificant not many years ago these industries now form a very important part of the trade of the country, and the interests which farmers are showing in them bespeaks still further progress.

If the Canadian Pacific Railway Company thought more of selling land than it does of colonization it would no doubt increase the price of its lands in accordance with the increasing value throughout the country. Satisfied settlers are, however, its aim, and land can be purchased from the company now, after four years of war and constantly increasing prices of every other commodity, at the same price as were ruling before the outbreak of the war.

HOW TO KEEP YOUNG

Variety in Activity is the Recipe—
Why Women Grow Old

Most people grow old in mind sooner than in body, writes a feminist. The mental state, of course, reacts on the body, especially on the face, and for that reason one sees a settled look of age creep into the faces of men and women who are still physically young;—and in women this means the loss of comeliness. One sometimes hears a woman say with pride that she has lived in the same house for ten years or more, or that she has gone to the same holiday resort every summer. A man perhaps boasts that he has risen at the same hour every morning, breakfasted at the same hour, travelled to and from business by the same train, lunched at the same restaurant. Such people will generally be seen to look set and old for their years. Regular habits, no doubt, form an important factor in a successful life, but they have this unquestionable drawback.

Women grow mentally old even earlier than men. Their lives are more monotonous, and it is this which ages their minds and blanches their looks. The best recipe for preserving youthfulness of mind and body is to secure variety. Change your house when you feel you are growing stagnant. Go to live in a new district. See new people. Strive to acquire new ideals. Vary the hour of rising. If you take luncheon out never go always to the same place. If you travel do not always use the same method of conveyance. Do not go out at fixed hours, but sometimes in the morning, sometimes in the afternoon, again in the evening. I know a man and his wife who have always worn an expression of boredom and weariness. One night on calling late I was surprised by the look of animation in their faces.

"We've been out for a walk in the moonlight," she said. "It was delightful. The first time I have been for a walk after nightfall for ten years." It was the novelty that brought back the sparkle and life to their faces. If you want to remain young in mind and keep such comeliness as was given you, secure variety. Try any simple change rather than remain stagnant. Move the furniture from place to place and from room to room, change the curtains, the pictures, and the wallpaper. Try new diets. Throw yourself zestfully into fresh pursuits. The simple secret of health and beauty is just variety.

MINCE MEAT RECIPES

Choice of Two Old-fashioned Ways of Making

Here are two recipes for mince meat procured from old-fashioned cooks:
No. 1—Five pounds of chopped beef, two pints of chopped suet, ten pints of chopped sour apples, two pounds of sugar, one quart of molasses, two ounces of cinnamon, one ounce of cloves, on tablespoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of pepper, six pounds of fruit. Mix all together and scald.

No. 2—Cook two and one-half pounds of beef (this should make two quarts when chopped), four quarts chopped apples, one pint of currants which have been thoroughly cleansed, one quart of raisins stoned just before using, one cup of chopped citron, four cups of brown sugar, two cups of molasses, one cup of chopped suet, one nutmeg grated, one tablespoonful of salt, two tablespoonfuls of cinnamon, one-half tablespoonful of cloves. Place in an earthen vessel and keep in a cool place. This quantity will make twelve pies.

Jellied Apples

Peel and core tart, firm apples, and put over the fire with just enough water to cover and sufficient white sugar to sweeten. Cook slowly on the back of the range until the apples are tender, but have not lost their shape; lift out with a split spoon and place in a crystal dish. Bring the liquid left from them to a boil (there should be about a pint and a half), and add to it a tablespoonful in a very little cold water for half an hour; color pink with fruit juice coloring or that which comes with the gelatine; when cool and nearly ready to set pour over the apples until they are covered, and set the dish on ice until very cold. Serve with a border of whipped cream.

Apple Rolly-Poly

Make a biscuit dough with sweet milk and baking powder; roll out quite thin in square shape, and cover with sliced tart apples, brown sugar to sweeten, and a little grated lemon peel; pinch the edges together, forming a long roll; tie in a cloth or pudding bag, wrung out of hot water and floured. Boil two hours—serve with hot treacle sauce.

Escalloped Beef

One pound of left-over beefsteak chopped fine, three soda crackers rolled, small lump of butter, a cupful of water, salt and pepper to taste. Put in a deep pan; cover with three more rolled crackers. Bake in the oven until done.

The Safest Place to Trade

THE COMLYN ALIBI

—BY—HEADON HILL

WARD, LOCK & CO., LIMITED
London, Melbourne, and Toronto

But the tatterdemalion seemed to be exercising a strange fascination on the boys. Sticking his hands in his pockets and his feet stubbornly on the ground, he surveyed the occupant of the hut at leisure, taking in the three days' growth of stubble beard, the tangle of iron-grey hair, the filthy garments, the fendered boots through one of which a toe was showing. When Tom Burbury spoke it was not to answer that plea for flight. He addressed himself to the sardonic humorist, whose attitude was curiously expectant, and he prefaced his remarks with the exasperating croak which with him did duty for a laugh.

"You've got a good check on you to talk about the police and to gas about a hotel," he said. "Allow me to present you to the hotel propriety. She will be glad to receive payment for your night's lodging. If you can't pay you'd better scot."

The tramp got to his feet and started to lurch out on to the moor, the two young people falling back before him.

"I'm only a poor worm and you're the early birds that's got him," he mouthed at them. "It's hard if a homeless traveller mayn't shelter in such a shack as this."

The gentle heart of Mavis was touched. "Don't think of leaving," she hastened to beg of the man. "My young friend was only joking, and rather bad taste, too. Pray rest here as long as you wish. No one is likely to interfere with you, but if so you can say that you have Miss Comlyn's permission."

The man knuckled his forehead and thanking her in the while of his class shambled back to his lair, while the boy followed Mavis suddenly across the moor, evidently resenting the rebuke.

"I didn't mean to be rough with you, Tom," the girl relieved the tension at last. "But I hate to be down on the unfortunate, and he can't do any harm here."

"I beg your pardon—he has done a great deal of harm already," was the surly rejoinder. And though Mavis pressed for an explanation none was forthcoming. Strained relations continued to the end of their homeward walk.

CHAPTER XIV.

Dear Old Pals

The tramp, though he had affected that intention, did not lie down again in the corner where his repose had been broken. Through a crevice in the remains of the door he watched the disturbers of his peace till they were out of sight, and then, producing a packet of neatly cut ham sandwiches from some folds in his rags, he devoured them with weakly appetite. A draught of weak whisky and water from a medicine bottle completed his simple breakfast.

"I'd rather it was coffee," he muttered with a gleam from under his shaggy brows. "The 'coffee' must come later."

Pulling out a blackened clay pipe he filled it with coarse slag and smoked, still keeping watch at the door of the hut.

"The kid may come back," he told himself. "I don't think he will, and if he doesn't I reckon there'll be a long wait."

There was a long wait—of several hours in fact—before the tramp suddenly stiffened like a terrier at the mouth of a rat hole. Along the sheep track through the heather came in single file Jasper Morgan and Professor Zimbalist, the former leading. The tramp silently knocked the ashes from his pipe and felt for something hard that lurked amid the tatters of his scanty raiment. The thing, whatever it was, was handy, and the wayfarer resumed his watch.

Morgan and his scientific comrade stopped at the great mound of tailings and proceeded to go through exactly the same antics as those for which Tom Burbury had enlisted Mavis Comlyn's services. Climbing the mound, poked about and pried on its rugged surface, but much more methodically than their predecessors. Both men were provided with miniature picks, with which they turned over the weed-grown rubbish. For a long time their labors were unrewarded. Then, suddenly, the Professor shouted to his companion that he had found a specimen.

"It's only a small one, but I'll go down and test it," he added.

Growing an assent, Morgan went on with his work and Zimbalist descended the mound, carrying the object in his hand. He walked to the shed and passed through the dilapidated doorway almost into the arms of the tramp who had been watching him. This hunter of fossils was evidently used to swift emergencies. Without a glance at the occupant of the hut he performed two actions with lightning celerity and almost simultaneously. Turning on his heel, he flung the stone he had just picked up—to all appearances it was nothing more—so that it fell forty yards away among rocky debris where it lay quite undistinguishable by anyone who had not examined it. At the same time he called out: "Come down, Morgan. I want you—at once, please."

Then, only did he give his attention to the stranger, who, without his knowing it, had made an ineffectual attempt to grab his arm before he flung the stone away. Zimbalist's protruberant eyes bulged in an effort to size up the man who might have been spying upon him, but no familiar impression was to be gathered from the unshaven face enshrined in its tangle of matted hair. The tramp seemed to be more fortunate, and his good fortune overwhelmed him with an almost inarticulate joy.

"Gosh blime! but if it isn't Number—There, blast it, I can't keep my mouth shut. You're the old pal, but you're the big that was at Fortland with me—four cells off in the same corridor," he exclaimed with the heartiness of one who meets an old friend. "Shoulder to shoulder in the quarries we toiled and proud I was to be in such company—alongside a real gentleman. In for a proper big thing, wasn't your matey—the Shrimpton swindle that made such a song? And you was Shrimpton, Lar humme, what a little world it is that you should run against me on this blooming moor. Wearing clobber like that, too, while I'm on my uppers."

Zimbalist made no direct reply, but again he shouted to the tenant of Comlyn Court to hurry up. Morgan blustered into the hut demanding what was wrong, but checking himself to an ominous silence at sight of the tramp.

"This man says he knows me," said the Professor as if that summed up the whole situation.

"Well, does he?" Morgan queried sharply.

"He is correct in his facts, but I cannot place him. But there were so many. It is possible that I may have forgotten."

"And I've been living rough, mister, and growed a lot of hair," the tramp took up the explanation. "Why him and me worked in the same— but there ain't any reason why I should give a dear old pal away, nor yet myself neither," he broke off. Then, turning to Zimbalist, he said, "Maybe you'll tumble to my moniker, if you can't recall my mug. Calvert was what I was called, and it's what I'm called still when I've no use for an alias."

"The Professor shook his head. 'I have no recollection of you or of your name,' he replied.

Morgan squared his burly frame, towered over the stranger, who was himself no bignity.

Saskatchewan's Live Stock Industry

Great Advances Have Been Made in the Numbers of Cattle During the Year

The sixth annual report of the live stock commissioner of Saskatchewan shows the flourishing condition of the live stock industry in that province. According to the report the number of horses in the province is 888,000, milk cows 354,000, other cattle 856,687, sheep 127,000 and swine 574,900. Their total value is estimated at $251,635,000.

In connection with the number of horses, which like all other live stock, is steadily increasing in the province, the report mentions the waning popularity of large tractors on farms, and the indispensability of the horse.

Great advances have been made in the numbers of cattle during the year, and conditions in respect to them are reported to be every bit as satisfactory as they are to horses. That breeders have realized the possibilities of cattle raising is shown by the instant demand for choice breeding heifers. Further proof of the trend towards live stock among the farmers of the province is given in the figures of consignments to and from the Union stock yards, at Winnipeg, Manitoba. In 1917, 137,357 head of cattle were shipped from Saskatchewan to Winnipeg; in 1916, 65,021; in 1915, 60,378; and in 1914, 54,010. Shipments west from Winnipeg show that Saskatchewan farmers are finishing stock in steadily increasing numbers every year. In 1917, 36,323 head of cattle were brought into the province for this purpose, as compared with 29,246 in 1916, and 9,380 in 1915.

The era of high prices has enabled farmers to make the most of the splendid opportunities the province affords for the successful raising of live stock, and as prospects are considered to be better than ever they were for continued remunerative prices for all kinds of live stock, progressive growth of the industry is assured.

An appreciable increase in the number of sheep in the province is noted. Farmers have taken advantage of the high prices for mutton, wool and breeding stock to extend their operations, and now that it is becoming more generally recognized how conditions in many parts of the province are peculiarly adapted to the successful raising of sheep, we may look for a steady increase in the industry year after year. These remarks apply with equal force to Alberta and Manitoba, where similar conditions obtain.

Strawberries in October

Some splendid ripe strawberries gathered in October at Clover Bar, Alberta, about ten miles from Edmonton, were brought into the city. The strawberry patch from which they had been given fruit since the first of June, and those picked at the beginning of October were quite as good as the early summer fruit. The success with which fruit can be grown in Northern Alberta is encouraging many people, both in the city and on the farms to devote more attention to it, and those who raise plants for sale have more orders than they can supply.

Riel Nearly Escaped Hangman

A Story of the Last Days of the Rebel Chief Hitherto Untold

There is now no doubt that when Louis Riel was captured by Tom Hourie and Armstrong, and handed over to the Canadian authorities, Sir John Macdonald was somewhat at a loss to know what to do with him. The great blot on his career was the killing of Scott at Fort Garry, but a long time had elapsed and no good could come from the revival of old scores. Besides—although it was not a justification—evidence has accumulated to show that Scott had taunted the provisional president with his impotency, and had provoked him almost beyond the limits of endurance.

Of course Riel's unforgivable sin was in invoking the aid of the Northern Indians and the murders were laid to his charge, which they perpetrated. He could plead that he did not force and could not prevent the excesses of his savage allies, and for such an excuse he had good precedents. He had only to point to the action of the Indians who were fighting with Montcalm after the surrender of Fort William-Henry. His own actions and those of his metis captains during the campaign on the Saskatchewan were characterized by a great deal of restraint, and the counsels of the halfbreeds were singularly moderate for a people inflamed by hostilities and a sense of their wrongs.

Then, too, perhaps the old conservative chieftain felt that the conflict had to a certain extent been precipitated by the dilatory action of the government in dealing with the grievances which the inhabitants of the country undoubtedly possessed.

Nevertheless, public feeling was thoroughly aroused, and there was a demand for a sacrifice. Riel's trial in Regina was a spectacular one, some of the ablest counsel in Canada took part in it, and Riel's own undoubted sincerity and eloquence had considerable influence in his favor. The jury brought in a strong recommendation for mercy, and there was no reason to doubt that it would be acted upon. In the meantime a strong racial agitation broke out in Eastern Canada and the extreme "Rouge" party in Quebec dared Sir John to carry into effect the sentence imposed on the rebel leader by Judge Richardson. There were many wise and reasonable people in Canada who doubted the wisdom of inflicting the extreme penalty of the law. There is little doubt that nowadays a much milder punishment would be devised to meet a similar case.

Sir John, therefore, was quite willing that Riel should escape the scaffold if it could be accomplished without exposing the government to a charge of weakness.

One of the most prominent French Canadians in the Territories at that time was Pascal Bonneau, a former railway contractor and later steel keeper at Regina. He was a life-long Conservative, and a strong adherent of the government. He had no sympathy whatsoever with the rebellion and he had aided Jean Louis Legare in keeping the Metis of the southern plains from joining forces with Riel. He knew the rebel chieftain personally, and whilst he had nothing but reprobation for his rebellious acts, he had commiseration for him in his sad condition.

Overtures were made to Mr. Bonneau to assist the escape of the prisoner. There is no doubt that it would have been the easiest way out of an embarrassing situation for the government. Riel would be out of their hands, and there could be no charge made against them either of weakness or revenge. Besides it would allay the bitter racial feeling growing up in Quebec.

Accordingly, Mr. Bonneau made his plans. The American boundary, where Riel, as a political offender, would be safe, was only a little over a hundred miles away, and it could be made in a night by means of relays. The fastest teams in the country were procured and stationed ten miles apart through the unsettled region south of Regina, and arrangements were made to have friendly guards on duty with the prisoner. Everything augured for success. Given a dark night and ten minutes start across the creek and not all the soldiers in Canada could have caught the fugitive.

It was not to be. The star of Louis David Riel was not in the ascendant and the curtain was about to drop on the last act of the tragedy. The assistance of a man who was thought to be friendly to Riel was invoked, and he, thinking perhaps, to obtain merit, went with his information to the local authorities who were, of course, obliged to take steps to frustrate the execution of the plan.

One battalion at Niagara Camp is credited with saving 1,600 pounds of sugar in a month. Even the grease in the camp kitchens is saved and sold, and there is always a market for good dripping.

Judea Friendly Toward Conquerors

Life Went On as Usual During Bombardment

The freshness of early morning in Judea is still undispelled by a sun not long risen.

On the left the silver waters ripple and quiver in the slanting rays; northward and on the west the illimitable desert stretches to the hills, and thence to mountains outlined against the sky, faint yet massive like ramparts of the Heavenly City. The whole is bathed in a shimmer of bluish grey, with which the effect of atmosphere has blended illusive tones of lilac and heliotrope. In the foreground a native village makes a splash of glowing color, set in the vivid green of a little oasis.

Not far away an array of tents proclaims the presence of the British expeditionary force, to whom the bugles called reveille one short half hour since. To the south, clear of outline although ethereal as a city in a dream, rise the towers and minarets of an Oriental town.

The aerial assemblage of buildings—temples, palaces, and flat-roofed dwelling houses—seems to cling and cluster round the mosque which towers above all, raising a shattered cupola towards the sky—the price of our advance.

"God is great!" the villagers had observed upon witnessing the destruction of a masterpiece of Oriental art; then they resumed the tenor of their way which was scarcely suspended during the bombardment. When the dust and noise subsided, they came forward with shy overtures of friendship towards the conquerors. The Frank was likely to make a kind master than the Turk, under whom they had lived so long.

In other respects life with them had gone on as usual, as it had done since the days of the Crusaders. This morning the children were playing their primitive games in the village street; some left off to gaze at an aeroplane circling overhead. Otherwise the inhabitants concerned themselves not at all with the alien encampment and its feverish activity.

As little did the doings of the Frank concern the fisherman who was setting out with his net over the arm, laden weighed; the form of net used by his forefathers from Biblical times. He was wholly indifferent to the presence of the young officers who strolled down from time to time from the camp, watching his nimble movements with curiosity. His eyes nearly protruding from his head, the fisherman sprang hither and thither, following the fish in the clear, transparent depths.

"Why does he not throw his net, the old fellow?" the British officers would ask each other, for many a faint was not followed by a throw. Had not the fisher the whole long morning before him; wherefore show unseemly haste in selecting the fish destined for the mid-day meal of his young family?

Of a sudden the net flew out, described a rapid semi-circle in the air, fell into the water, and down to the clear sand on the bottom, imprisoning the fish which was drawn up, a gleam of silver indicating the capture.

The sun rose higher and higher; the colors of the landscape became one dazzle of quivering white. Bugles sounded in the camp; men and horses executed mysterious movements; but still the fisherman remained absorbed in his morning's sport.

Aeroplane came and went, speeding messages, changing the destiny of Syria and of the world. Noon approached; all sounds in the village were hushed; the children were taking their noonday sleep in shady corners.

The fisherman folded his net, and walked slowly homeward with his captures.

President Wilson's Desk

Happy Little Incident in the Past Relations of the United States and Great Britain

The story of President Wilson's desk at the White House is told by a London newspaper. It recalls such a happy little incident in the past relations of the United States and Great Britain that it is quite worth giving once again. In 1852, H.M.S. Resolute was sent to the Arctic in search of Franklin, but getting into difficulties, she was abandoned by her crew. Three years later an American whaler extricated and towed the ship into port. The Resolute was then purchased and refitted by the United States government and sent to England, by President Franklin Pierce, as a token of good will and friendship.

Some little time afterward, being past service, the Resolute was broken up in Plymouth dockyard, and from her timbers Queen Victoria had a desk made, which she sent to President Buchanan as a memorial of "the courtesy and loving kindness" which had prompted his predecessor to send the vessel back to England. The desk has ever since been the one used by successive presidents of the United States for their official correspondence. — Christian Science Monitor.

Tasmanian Tiger Almost Extinct

The Tasmanian "tiger" seems in a fair way to become as extinct as the Tasmanian emu or the "boomer" or "forester" kangaroo, whose former existence in the island is recalled only by a few stray place-names. In the back districts of eastern Tasmania, where the "tiger" was common enough twenty-five years ago, owing to its taste for mutton, it is now utterly unknown. It still survives in some of the western regions, such as the country back of Tynna or beyond the Arthur River, which are still outside the limits of settlement. A good healthy "tiger" is, or was before the war upset the market, worth anything up to one hundred dollars as a Zoo specimen.

Rise of a Balkan Republic

Originated Through Initiative of French Colonel

A republic has already arisen within the area of the Balkans which, according to a correspondent of the London Times, is the direct result of the war. As a fact, the little republic of Koritsa or Korce as it is called in Albania, originated through the initiative of a brilliant French colonel of cavalry in the late autumn of 1916. Situated within the territory of Albania, it may, perhaps, be best described as a historical episode.

At the time of its formation, the bulk of Albania was occupied by the Austrians. In the south the Italians held Avlona, but between them and the allied Salonika forces was a solid wedge of Austrians and King Constantine's unfriendly Greeks.

In the autumn General Sarraill pushed forward in a northwesterly direction, and occupied Koritsa and the region near lake Mallk. This was the first time that French troops from Salonika had found themselves in Albanian territory, and the colonel in command was faced with the problem of setting up a civil administration.

Northeast lay Serbia and southeast lay Greece, but Koritsa was neither. According to the treaty of Bucharest, the only legal instrument recognized by the allies, it was part of Albania. The colonel solved the difficulty by proclaiming Koritsa and the Caza or administrative district of which it is the capital, to be an autonomous Albanian republic, under the protection of the allies.

General Sarraill, confronted with a fait accompli, accepted the situation, and Koritsa has remained a republic under a council of 12 elders, mixed Mussulman and Christian. When the governing body was set up, Essad Pasha uttered a blessing in Albanian, a flag was devised, a post office system set up, and stamps issued.

All, however, has not gone without a hitch. The two-headed eagle which flaunted so bravely on the flag and the first stamp issue, roused antagonism, and was said to be not the genuine bird beloved of Skanderberg and all good Shkipetari, but a monstrous Austrian imperial creature. Yet, on the whole, Koritsa has greatly enjoyed its autonomy, even if it realizes that days are coming when it will be merged in some larger whole. Meantime, owing to various advances of the allies, it gained several extensions of territory.

Chinese Don't Like Cheese

Statisticians have figured out that England eats the larger part of Europe's output of cheese. Europe's output amounts to 350,000,000 kilograms. England alone consumes 180,000,000 kilograms of this amount. Next comes Holland, which takes 56,000,000; Switzerland takes 43,000,000; France, 31,000,000, and Germany 20,000,000 kilograms.

The only people on earth who eat no cheese are the Chinese.

Trucks Without Rubber

Use of Spring Wheels Not Very Satisfactory

Interesting data has come to hand concerning the methods employed by the German government to equip motor transports with devices aimed to take up the shock and vibration that ensues when trucks rumble over roads. As is now generally known Germany has virtually no rubber, and all that it can garner by capture or by surreptitious imports must be given to balloon, airplane and medical divisions. Consequently, what inventive genius that can be spared from the conjuring of new gases and devilish war devices must be considered on a substitute. The German has hit upon the spring wheel as the outlet to his tire troubles.

All engineering skill is contributed in perfecting this type, and that thus far the spring wheel has not been altogether satisfactory is borne out by recent captures of transports and drivers. According to information received by manufacturers the spring wheel is satisfactory only when a moderate speed is employed, and where the roads are fairly smooth. In a retreat or an emergency that calls for excessive speed the wheel is almost useless as the springs easily become displaced and the truck crippled.

box car on Thursday and both were in a very serious condition. Much against their will they were taken to the hospital, and despite the best of attention Mr. Olinic died Sunday morning, but the other man is now recovering. This was the first death in the hospital. The deceased's sister has arrived from Saskatchewan and the funeral will take place today.

Gleichen's new brass band held its first practice Monday night and gives every promise of becoming a success. W. J. McMullen is the new leader and already has shown that he is the right man in the right place. Furthermore, he is supported by a number of young men, who for the most part are musicians of considerable experience and no mean talent. The members who were at the first practice were Messrs. Bates, Lyns, Jenz, McMullen, Parsons, Dunsmuir and McCreary. These will soon be augmented by a number of others who are enthusiastic and anxious to get their instruments. This is a good thing—every body boost.

In acknowledging the donations to the Hospital last issue two were unintentionally overlooked, namely: Mrs. J. C. Buckley milk and eggs weekly, and Mrs. J. Koefoed eggs and milk.

In the twelve months ending September, 1918, Canada exported $163,488,362 worth of animal products and $440,742,430 worth of agricultural products, a total of $604,230,792. In addition to her farm products, she exported over $33,000,000 worth of fish. In the first 47 months of the war Canada exported 1,874,701,900 worth of foodstuffs. This effort has helped to maintain the Allies, and it has helped Canada maintain her war efforts. The call to Canada is still for production, and by increased production Canada can easily pay her billion dollar war debt and maintain Canadian prosperity.
